If you do, you should know... - Before learning how to write a Resume, you must first know what to write in your Resume. Without quality content, the Resume will be severely 'malnourished' - Simply describing what you've done in detail is not enough - A powerful Resume is one that place sufficient emphasis on both the descriptive part of what has been done and what has been achieved! - Job Seekers that do not use numbers in their Resumes are severely short-changing themselves. - It's critical that you get someone else to proof-read your Resume for you after you're done to eradicate typos other mistakes. Youre about to discover a one-stop reference guide detailing a comprehensive approach and a step-by-step system on what needs to be done in order for you to effectively write a winning Resume. It is an excellent resource for all job seekers who wish to learn how to write a Resume. Here Is A Preview Of What You'll Learn... 1) The 6 Core Principles of Resume Writing Every interview-winning Resume has certain distinct characteristics so make sure yours have them as well if you want your Resume to make it to the next round of the recruitment process. 2) Profile Your Strengths This is where it all starts. Youll harness useful information from your memories systematically and these form into the content of your Resume. You have to know that what to write comes before learning how to write. Get the basics right first. 3) The Resumes Structure The information from your Resume has to flow across to the reader in an orderly way in order to maximize the attention span the reader has on your Resume. Find out how this can be done with this standard 8-point structure. 4) Writing the section on Past Work Experience This is the most difficult section of the entire Resume. Get this section right and youd have raised the chances of securing job interviews significantly. Sadly, most folks get this part wrong. 5) The Power of Numbers Numbers have the capability to tell a powerful story; increasing the firepower of a statement tremendously if used strategically. Most people however, dont use it and that greatly discounts the significance of the individuals contributions. 6) Writing the Cover Letter There is this misconception that you can put in the cover letter whatever that you cant put in the Resume due to space constraints. Wrong! The Cover Letter and Resume should complement each other and not supplement. Learn how you can use the Cover Letter strategically to your advantage. 7) The Internet and You In our digital age, the internet is a double-edged sword that can cut your chances of securing job interviews without you even knowing it. Find out how that is possible and what you can do about it And Much, Much More!

About the AuthorRaised in a humble family of two, Raiden is an Engineer by training. Upon graduation, he joined a world class Multi National Corporation as a Management Professional in the Manufacturing Industry. In the early stages of his career, he took on the role of an Analyst which gave him strategic detailed insights as to how World Class Organizations with an annual turnover of Billions of Dollars managed their finances and kept it intact. It was such disciplined financial prudence and business acumen that sparked an interest in him to make use of what he learned and apply it to his personal life. In the years as an employee with the Corporation, he was trained to write his own Annual Personal Appraisal. This was to be used in the Annual Ranking Exercise where top management would rank the employees in order of merit and performance. With a stroke of luck, he had guidance from some of the most Senior Managers of his department and was able to acquire a wealth of information on how to write a person's appraisal. These powerful writing skills were later adapted into Resume Writing Skills that he was able to use to help many other job seekers secure job interviews. Till date, Raiden helped hundreds of applicants all over the world review their Resumes for improvement opportunities. Many of these applicants eventually secured jobs in Healthcare, Teaching, Stock Derivative Trading, Customer Service, Research, Engineering, Accountancy and many others. In his free time, Raiden also conducted classes for Private Colleges and events to equip the students with the necessary Resume Writing Skills for an effective job search process. Raiden enjoys exploring the culinary arts. A firm believer in positive food and nutrition, Raiden always takes time off his busy schedule to cook for his family. He enjoys exploring how to modify recipes to suit his family's taste buds and takes pride in his cooking. It is in his belief that home-cooked nutrition is the best source of sustenance for his family. Today, Raiden is happily married with two children and resides in Singapore.
